OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH & SAFETY MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS (AS/NZS 4801; OHSAS18001 and SA WorkCover Exempt Standards)

The management of workplace and employee safety is central to the improvement of efficiency, profit and the reduction of accident, legal, lost time, rehabilitation and workers' compensation costs.

The Australian and New Zealand Standard (AS/NZS 4801) or European Standard (OHSAS18001) standards combined with the various federal and state standards regulations provide a framework for the development of a safety management system.

Such systems are focused on the identification of hazards and the measurement of the risk connected with each. Each item can then be ranked for importance and control.

Occupational health and safety management systems offer an ideal starting point for the development of quality and environmental management systems and their similarity provides for future integration and simplification of procedures. Certification to AS/NZS4801, OHSAS18001 and, or, achievement of state based performance standards can lead to reduced insurance premiums.
